

DINO DRAW OPENS DOORS

The Lee Kong Chian Natural History Museum opened its doors for the first time to 765 members of the public yesterday.

For visitors Hilmi Yeo, a 32-year-old designer, and Lawrence Chang, a 34-year-old pilot, the dinosaur exhibit (left) was their favourite.

Admission tickets are sold in six 1½-hour slots to help with crowd control.

Retired construction supervisor Tan Kee Kwang, 68, yesterday arrived at the museum at 2pm, 30 minutes before his admission time. But he said the wait was not an inconvenience. He said: “(Staggering admission times) is good as it won’t get too crowded.”
