

“Father frogs will then attend to the eggs by sitting on them... and they guard the eggs by standing between them and the entry hole where they will lunge at intruders and make loud alarm calls to keep them away.”

— Lead researcher K. S. Seshadri, a PhD candidate from the National University of Singapore’s Department of Biological Sciences, on how the newly-discovered male white-spotted bush frogs (below) keep their eggs safe from harm

PHOTO: K.S. SESHADRI