

S'pore team studying why some Covid-19 patients have heart damage

A team of doctors and researchers in Singapore has started a cardiac research programme to better understand why some patients who are hit hard by Covid-19 also suffer heart damage and how to prevent this.

The National University Heart Centre, Singapore (NUHCS) team aims to recruit 100 Covid-19 patients as mounting evidence overseas suggests some patients continue to suffer long-term complications even after recovery.
